Well.

He wore a collar hard as steel,
His shoes were tight from toe to heel,
His head was broiled in a hot hat,
His pants would pinch him when he sat,
His strangling vest he dared not fight
His coat was padded and too tight,
A hard-boiled shirt cascaded his chest—
And yet he smiled, He was well dressed.

THEATER GOSSIP.

Miss Anna Bell Ward, Maysville's charming vocalist, who has been taking voice lessons at the College of Music, Cincinnati, has discontinued her studies in the Queen City till September on account of the absence of Prof. Mattioli, instructor in the vocal department. Miss Ward will continue to give the favor of her ability as a singer to the Maysville public and can be heard every week at the Pastime. The "Ward Kids" will sing at that theater this afternoon and night.

The Hollow of Her Hand

by George Barr McCutcheon

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrاندall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrاندall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrاندall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrاندall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrاندall. Feeling that the girl had done her service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrاندall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrاندall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrاندall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Sara Wrاندall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrاندall, brother of Challis, becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrاندalls and repatriation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrاندall by marrying his murderer into the family. Hetty, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen her before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Much to his chagrin, Leslie is refused by Hetty. Booth and Hetty confess their love for each other, but the latter declares that she can never marry as there is an insurmountable barrier in the way. Hetty admits to Sara that she loves Booth. Leslie declares that Hetty must marry Leslie, who must be made to pay his brother's debt to the girl. Hetty, seeing that she is in a real story of the tragedy and Sara threatens to strangle her if she says a word, Sara insists that Hetty must marry Leslie. This time she has believed Hetty to have "nerved" in her relations with Challis Wrاندall. Later she realizes that Hetty is innocent. Leslie again proposes to Hetty and is rejected. Hetty prepares to leave, declaring that after what has happened she can remain no longer. Hetty starts for Europe. At sea she receives a message from Booth that he has started on a faster steamer and will be waiting for her on the other side. Booth meets her and accompanies her to London.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued.

When the night boat from Dover to Calais slipped away from her moorings that evening, Hetty Castleton and her maid were on board, with all their bags and trunks, and Brandon Booth was supposed to be completely at sea in the heart of that glittering London town.

The night was fog-laden and dripping, and the crossing promised to be unpleasant. Wrapped in a thick easterly Hetty sat huddled up in the lee of the deckhouse, sick at heart and miserable. She reproached herself for the scurvy trick she was playing on him, reviled herself and yet pitied herself.

A tall man came shambling down the narrow space along the rail and stopped directly in front of her. She started in alarm as he reached out his hand to support himself against the deckhouse. As he leaned forward, he laughed.

"You were thinking of me, Hetty," said the man.

For a long time she stared at him, transfixed, and then, with a low moan, covered her eyes with her hands.

"Is it true—is it a dream?" she sobbed.

He dropped down beside her and gathered her in his strong, eager arms.

"You were thinking of me, weren't you? And reproaching yourself, and hating yourself for running away like that?"

"I thought so. Well, you might as well try to dodge the smart-detective in the world as to give the slip now, darling."

"You—you spied on me?" she cried, muffled tones. She lay very limp in his arms.

"I did," he confessed, without shame. "Gad, when I think of what I might be doing at this moment if I hadn't found you out in time! Think of me back there in London, racing about like a madman, searching for you in every—"

"Please, please!" she implored. "But luck was with me. You can't get away, Hetty. I shan't let you out of my sight again. I'll camp in front of your door and you'll see me wither and die of sleeplessness, for one or the other of my eyes will always be open."

"Oh, I am so tired, so miserable," she murmured.

"Poor little sweetheart!" "I wish you would hate me."

"Lie where you are, dearest, and—forget!"

"If I only could—forget!"

"Rest. I will hold you tight and keep you warm. We're in for a nasty crossing, but it is paradise for me. I am mad with the delight of having you here, holding you close to me, feeling you in my arms. The wilder the night the better. Or I am wild with the joy of it all. I love you! I love you! He tried to press to him in a sort of

A long time afterward the throbbing ceased, bell-buoys whistled and clanged about them; the sea suddenly grew calm and lifeless; they slid over it as if it were a quivering sheet of ice; and lights sneaked out of the fog and approached with stealthy swiftness. Bells rang below and above them, sailors sprang up from everywhere and calls were heard below; the rattling of chains and the thumping of heavy luggage took the place of that steady, monotonous beat of the engines. People began to infest the deck, limp and groaning, harassed but voiceless. A mighty sigh seemed to envelop the whole ship—a sigh of relief.

Then it was that these two arose stiffly from their sheltered bench and gave heed to the things that were about them.

The channel was behind them.

CHAPTER XV.

Rattling Old Bones. They journeyed to Paris by the night mail. He was waiting for her on the platform when she descended from the wagon lit in the Gare du Nord. Sleepy passengers crowded with them into the customs department. She, alone among them all, was smiling brightly, as if the world could be sweet at an hour when, by all odds, it should be sleepless.

"I was up and on the lookout for you at Amiens," he declared, as they walked off together. "You might have got off there, you know," with a wry grin.

"I shall not run away from you again, Brandon," she said earnestly. "I promise, on my honor."

"By Jove," he cried, "that's a relief!" Then he broke into a happy laugh.

"I shall go to the Ritz," she said, after her effects had been examined and were ready for release.

"I thought so," he announced calmly. "I wired for rooms before I left London."

"Really, this is ridiculous!" "Don't frown like that, Hetty," he pleaded.

As they rattled and bounced over the cobblestones in a taxi-meter on the way to the Place Vendôme, he devoted the whole of his conversation to the delicious breakfast they were to have, expatiating glibly on the wonderful berries that would come first in that always-to-be-remembered meal. She was ravenously hungry by the time they reached the hotel, just from listening to his dissertation on chops and rolls and coffee as they are served in Paris, to say nothing of waffles and honey and the marmalade that no Englishman can do without.

Alone in his room, however, he was quite another person. His calm assurance took flight the instant he closed the door and moodily began to prepare for his bath. Resolution was undiminished, but the facts in the case were most desolating. Whatever it was that stood between them, there was no gainsaying its power to influence their lives. It was no trifle that caused her to take this second flight, and the sooner he came to realize the seriousness of opposition the better.

He made up his mind on one point in that half-hour before breakfast; if she asked him again to let her go her way in peace, it was only fair to her and right that he should submit to the inevitable. She loved him, he was sure of it. Then there must be a very good reason for her perplexing attitude toward him. He would make one more attempt to have the truth from her. Falling in that, he would accept the situation as hopeless, for the time being at least. She should know that he loved her deeply enough for that.

She joined him in the little open-air cafe, and they sat down at a table in a remote corner. There were few people breakfasting. In her tender blue eyes there was a look of sadness that haunted him, even as she smiled and called him beloved.

"Hetty, darling," he said, leaning forward and laying his hand on hers, "can't you tell me what it is?"

She was prepared for the question. In her heart she knew the time had come when she must be fair with him. He observed the pallor that stole into her warm, smooth cheeks as she regarded him fixedly for a long time before replying.

"There is only one person in the world who can tell you, Brandon. It is for her to decide. I mean Sara Wrاندall."

He felt a queer, sickening sensation of uneasiness sneak into existence. In the back of his mind, a hateful fear began to shape itself. For a long time he looked into her somber eyes, and as he looked the fear that was hateful took on something of a definite shape.

"Did you know her husband?" he asked, and somehow he knew what the answer would be.

"Yes," she replied, after a moment. She was startled. Her lips remained parted.

He watched her closely. "Has this secret anything to do with Challis Wrاندall?"

"It has," said she, meeting his gaze steadily.

His hands clutched the edge of the table in a grip that turned the knuckles white.

"Hetty!" he cried, in a hoarse whisper. "You—can't mean that you—"

"You must go to Sara," she cried hurriedly. "Haven't I told you that she is the one—"

"Where you in love with that infernal scoundrel?" he demanded fiercely.

"Sara knows everything. She will tell you."

"Are you carrying on an affair with him while professing to be the wife of another?" he asked.

"Tell me that! Did can tell you no more. Why do you glare at me as if I were the meanest thing on earth? Is this love? Is this your idea of greatness? Isn't it enough for you to know that Sara is my loyal, devoted friend; that she—"

"Wait!" he commanded darkly. "Is it possible that she did not discover your secret until the day you left her house so abruptly? Does that explain your sudden departure?"

"I can answer that," she said quietly. "She has known everything from the day I met her. I have not said anything, Brandon, to lead you to believe that I was in love with Challis Wrاندall, have I?"

His eyes softened. "No, you haven't. I hope you will forget what I said. You see, I knew Wrاندall's reputation. He had no sense of honor. He—"

"Well, I have!" she said levelly.

He flushed. "I am a beast! I'll put it in this way, then: Was he in love with you?"

"You are still unfair. I shall not answer."

He was silent for a long time. "And Sara's lips are sealed," he mused, still possessed of doubts and fears.

"Until she elects to tell the story, dearest love, my lips are as well sealed. I love you better than anything else in all this world. I could willingly offer up my life for you, but—well, my life does not belong to me. It is Sara's."

"For heaven's sake, Hetty, what is all this?" he cried in desperation.

"I can say no more. It is useless to insist, Brandon. If you can wrest the story from her, all well and good. You will hate me then, dear love. But it cannot be helped. I am prepared."

"Tell me this much: When you refused to marry Leslie, was your course inspired by what had happened in—in connection with Challis Wrاندall?"

"You forget that it is you that I love," she responded simply.

"But why should Sara urge you to marry Leslie if there is anything—"

"Hush! There is the waiter. Come to my sitting-room after breakfast. I have something to say to you. We must come to a definite understanding. This cannot go on."

He was with her for an hour in that pinched little sitting-room, and left her there without a vestige of rancor in his soul. She would not give an inch in the stand she had taken, but something immeasurably great in his make-up rose to the occasion and he went forth with the conviction that he had no right to demand more of her than she was ready to give. He was satisfied to abide by her decision. The spell of her was over him more completely than ever before.

Two days later he saw her off at the Gare de Lyons, bound for Interlaken. There was a complete understanding between them. She wanted to be quite alone in the Alpine town; he was not to follow her there. She had reserved rooms at the Schweizerhof, and the windows of her sitting-room looked straight up the valley to the snow-covered crest of the Jungfrau. She remembered these rooms; as a young girl she had occupied them with her father and mother. By some hook or crook, Booth arranged by wire for her to have them again, not an easy matter at that season of the year. Later she was to go to Lucerne, and then to Venice.

The slightest shred of hope was left for Booth. Even though he might accomplish the task he had set upon himself—the conquest of Sara in respect to the untold story—he still had Hetty's dismal prophecy that after he learned the truth he would come to see why they could not be married. But he would not despair.

"We'll see," was all that he said in response to her forlorn cry that they were parting for ever. There was a grinness in the way he said it that gave her something to cherish during the months to come; the hope that he would come back and take her in spite of herself.

He sailed from Cherbourg on the first steamship calling there. Awake, he thought of her; asleep, he dreamed of Challis Wrاندall. There was something uncanny in the persistence with which that ruthless despoiler of peace forced his way into his dreams, to the absolute exclusion of all else. The voyage home was made horrid by these nightly reminders of a man he scarcely knew, yet dreaded. He became more or less obsessed by the idea that an evil spell had descended upon him in the shape of a ghostly influence.

The weeks passed slowly for Hetty. There were no letters from Sara, but an occasional line or so from Mr. Carroll. She had made Brandon Booth promise that he would not write to her, nor was he to expect anything from her. If her intention was to cut herself off entirely from her recent out (though how she did it, heaven knows), that Lord Murgatroyd's grand-niece was no longer the intimate of that impossible person, Sara Gooch. She couldn't think of Sara without thinking of Gooch.

But at last Mrs. Rowe-Martin departed, much to Hetty's secret relief, but not before she had increased the girl's burdens by introducing her into a cold-nosed cosmopolitan set from which there were but three ways of escape. She refused to marry one of them, denied another the privilege of making love to her, and declined to play auction bridge with all of them. They were not long in dropping her, although it must be said there was real regret among the men.

From Mrs. Rowe-Martin and others she heard that Mrs. Redmond Wrاندall and Vivian were to be in Scotland in October, for somebody-or-other's christening, and that Leslie had been doing some really wonderful flying at Pau.

"I am so glad, my dear," said Mrs. Rowe-Martin, "that you refused to marry Leslie. He is a cad. Besides, you would have been in a perpetual state of nerves over his flying."

Of Sara, there was no news, as might have been expected. Mrs. Rowe-Martin made it very clear that Sara was a respectable person—but heavens!

The chill days of autumn came and the crowd began to dwindle. Hetty made preparations to join in the exodus. As the days grew short and bleak, she found herself thinking more and more of the happy-hearted, symbolic dicky-bird on a faraway window ledge. His life was neither a travesty nor a tragedy; hers was both of these.

Something told her too that Brandon Booth had wormed the truth out of Sara, and that she would never see him again. It hurt her to think that while Sara believed in her, the man who loved her did not. It is a way men have.

CHAPTER XVI.

Vivian Aims Her Opinions. Chief among Booth's virtues was his undeviating loyalty to a set purpose. He went back to America with the firm intention to clear up the mystery surrounding Hetty Castleton, no matter how irksome the delay in achieving his aim or how vigorous the methods he would have to employ. Sara Wrاندall, to all purposes, held the key; his object in life now was to induce her to turn it in the lock and throw open the door so that he might enter in and become a sharer in the secrets beyond.

A certain amount of optimistic courage attended him in his campaign against what had been described to him as the impossible. He could see no clear reason why she should withhold the secret under the new conditions, when so much in the shape of happiness was at stake. It was in this spirit of confidence that he prepared to confront her on his arrival in New York, and it was the same unbounded faith in the belief that nothing evil could result from a perfectly just and honorable motive that gave him the needed courage.

He stayed over night in New York, and the next morning saw him on his way to Southlook. There was something truly ingenious in his desire to get to the bottom of the matter without fear or apprehension. At the very worst, he maintained, there could be nothing more reprehensible than a passing infatuation, long since dispelled, or perhaps a mildly sinister episode in which virtue had been triumphant and vice defeated with unpleasant results to at least one person, and that person the husband of Sara Wrاندall.

Pat met him at the station and drove him to the little cottage on the upper road.

"You didn't stay long," said he reflectively, after he had put the bag up in front. He took up the reins.

"Not very," replied his master. "After a dozen rods or more, Pat tried again."

"Just sixteen days, I make it."

"Seems longer."

"Perhaps you'll be after going back soon."

"Why should you think that, Patrick?"

"Because you don't seem to be takin' much interest in your surroundin's here," said Pat loftily. He delivered a smart smack on the crupper with his stubby whip, and pursed his lips for the companionship to be derived from whistling.

"I suppose you know why I went to Europe," said Booth, laying his hand affectionately on the man's arm.

"Sure I do," said Pat, forgetting to whistle. "And was it bad luck you had, sor?"

"A temporary case of it, I'm afraid."

"Well," said the Irishman, looking up at his employer with the most profound encouragement in his mind, "if it's any help to you, sor, I'll say that I've never found bad luck to be anything but timporary. And, believe me, I've had plenty of it. Mary was down near three years makin' up her mind to say yis to me."

"And since then you've had no bad luck?" said Booth, with a smile.

"Plenty of it, begob, but I've had some one besides meself to blame for it. There's a lot in that, Mr. Brandon. When a man marries, he simply divides his luck into two parts, good and bad, and if he's like most men he puts the bulk of the bad luck on his wife and keeps to himself all he can as the good for a rainy day. That's what makes him a strong man and able to meet trouble when it comes. The beauty of the arrangement is that bad luck is only timporary and a woman enjoys talking about it, while good luck is wid us nine-tenths of the time, whether we know it or not, and we talk about it."

Lower Animals That Weep. Among the creatures that weep most easily are the ruminants. All hunters know that the stag weeps, and we are also assured that the bear sheds tears when it sees its last hour approaching.

The giraffe is not less sensitive, and regards with tearful eyes the hunter who has wounded it. Dogs weep quite easily. The same is true of certain monkeys. As for the elephant, there is abundant evidence of the ease with which it weeps. It sheds tears when wounded, or when it sees that it cannot escape.

IT WAS A SURPRISE

By ALLIE CLAYTON.

The daughter of the household, aged eleven, looked up from her book as the man caller came into the library. "How do you do, Mr. Dearmore," she said, getting up politely. "You might as well take a comfortable chair because sister won't be down for ages. She is always slow about getting dressed and I suppose now she'll be slower than ever because she won't care if she does keep you waiting."

"Well, why shouldn't she care, I'd like to know?" inquired the caller with an assumption of surprise designed to be comic.

The young person hitched a little closer to him in her eagerness. "I just found out!" she told him, "tonight. I guess they weren't going to tell me, but sister was so interested in brushing out her switch that she didn't notice me and mother said: 'You might have done better if you'd more ambition, but, thank heaven, you're engaged at last!' And sister said yes, it was time and she'd have to make the best of it. Why, she's engaged! Don't you understand?"

"You surprise me," said the caller, with interest.

The young person nodded her head. "It's awfully exciting to have an engaged person in the family. We never had one before. I held my hand over my mouth to keep from asking right out who it was, but I knew if I spoke they'd make me go away—and then all they said was that where the trooper was coming from if dad didn't make a killing goodness only knew. What's a trooper?"

"A sort of feminine delirium, I believe," the young man told her. "Wouldn't you like to read out loud to me from your book?"

"Not when I can talk," the young person assured him, promptly. "I'd think it was Bob Samson, only he hasn't been here for ages. He's riding around a ranch out West now and he always brought me chocolates and petted the dog and waited hours and hours for sister. Mother told her one day for goodness' sake when she got her hands on that huge old Samson house to burn it down and put up another one with a French gray drawing room, and other things, but I guess Bob slipped a cog somehow—"

"Er—what?"

"Well, Aunt Clara said to mother that a cog in the wheels must have slipped somehow and how did he ever get away and wasn't it a pity! So I suppose Bob did it. I always liked his chocolates—he brought me just as good ones as he brought sister. Sometimes they try to pass off cheap candy on me, but I know! Then I feed it to the dog."

"I'm glad it wasn't that Suddens man. He always called me 'little one' and patted my head and he had bronchitis and always coughed before he spoke, and sister said she didn't care if he was rich, but she couldn't endure a man who wore brown ties and ate grapefruit with a fork and anyhow he gave her the shivers. That was the time mother scolded so and sister went to Aunt Clara's for a month."

"I'm surprised at her getting engaged, because she'll have to have a house and meals then and she's simply awful and she wouldn't wear her life away keeping down the grocery bills for any man, and he might as well make up his mind to it. Anyhow, sister never loses her head, because mother says so, and she'll make him toe the mark. Mother says that with her sweet smile sister could make a man believe white was black, but that seems foolish. Wouldn't you know black if you saw it?"

"I used to think I was able to distinguish colors," admitted the caller.

"But you're different," said the young person. "It isn't as though you were one of sister's trailers—that's what dad calls 'em. It doesn't make any difference to you. Only I thought if I told you about it you'd understand why she didn't hurry to get down here, now she's interested in one particular man."

"Well," said the caller, "I'll tell you a secret. I'm the particular man!"

ERS SHOULD GIVE THEIR ATTENTION TO GREEN APPLE APHIS

Nearly Every Section of Kentucky Was Attacked By This Scourge In 1913 and the Same Trouble Can Be Expected Again This Year—The Methods of Control

During the spring of nineteen thirteen, Kentucky passed through a very severe scourge of green apple aphid, more commonly called plant lice. Nearly every apple-growing section of the state was attacked and in some instances the crop for the season was a complete loss due to the ravages of this little pest. Since we are liable to a repetition of this same trouble again this year, it is well to call the growers' attention to it before it is too late.

The work of the aphid is familiar to everyone who has had any experience in an orchard. Their presence is usually characterized by the curling of the leaves and malformation of the blossoms and fruit. In orchards where the aphid has been particularly bad the previous season, many gnarly ill-formed apples will be found clinging to the trees long after the leaves drop. If the injury were confined to the fruit alone, it would not be so bad, but the aphid also attacks the young growing shoots, thereby weakening them and the tree so that the chances for a stand of fruit another season is greatly lessened.

Twig infested with green aphid.

The life history of the green aphid is quite complex. Small, shiny, black eggs are laid in the fall usually on the tips of twigs under the bud scales and on roughened areas of the branch. About the time the leaves are beginning to burst forth in the spring the aphids appear. They are small, greenish yellow insects, and are usually found on the under side of the leaves. As the season advances and their numbers increase, they spread to the nearby stems, leaves and branches.

The insect that hatches from the eggs in the spring is known as the "mother," because she is the mother of all the future generations produced during the summer and fall. She produces her young alive and later on, in succeeding generations, winged forms appear that are able to migrate to other hosts.

THE SEED CORN MAGGOT AND OTHER INSECTS ATTACKING SPROUTING CORN.

Complaints of injury to germinating seed corn by a small footless maggot have recently reached the station, and on examination the mischief proves to be the work of the above insect. It is a young of a small gray fly resembling in a general way the house fly, but very much smaller. The maggots work into the sprouting corn, along the germ, and once inside the substance so as to weaken the young plant. Specimens of the insect were taken from the experiment station from Haysburg and Maysville are about one-half of an inch long, yellowish-white, the body blunt behind and tapering to the front; the mouth provided with a pair of black hooks, the tips of which, coming from the mouth opening, can be seen with a hand magnifier. There are no legs, its means of getting about being by a somewhat labored wriggling.

This insect attacks a good many other plants besides corn in cultivated ground, and is especially common and injurious to onions, beets and hemp, and is thus likely to be common in corn following these crops. It is not to be regarded as one of the most serious corn pests, however, its appearance in corn being occasional and its depredations generally local.

Where it is giving trouble, it is suggested that the corn used for replanting be treated with coal tar as follows: Soak the seed corn for a couple of minutes in warm water, then stir among it quickly a couple of teaspoonfuls of coal tar so as to bring a little

ROOTS WILL MAKE COLT THRIFTY

Cooked roots, mixed with wheat bran or ground oats or barley occasionally, will go a long way in making a better, and more thrifty colt.

A well-bred colt is half of the game, plenty of feed and care is the other half.

For fall pasture sow rape in the grain.

Why not raise more hogs and grain?

Since the aphid appears in successive broods, growers must be on the watch for them and apply some remedy for their control immediately upon their appearance. Special effort should be made to check the first broods so as to lessen the danger of attacks later on.

Aphids belong to a class of insects known as sucking insects, hence the methods of control must necessarily be some form of contact insecticide. Thorough spraying with strong lime-sulfur in the spring just before the buds start to swell is beneficial in that the coating of lime-sulfur will cause the death of some of the eggs. This application luckily coincides with the application for San Jose scale and it is another argument in favor of the dormant spray.

However, this application does not get all of the eggs and in many cases the trees become affected before the grower is aware that anything is wrong. A condition of this kind calls for prompt attention since an application of spray material will not be as effective after the leaves have once curled. Strong lime-sulfur can not be used at this time in combating aphids because of the danger of ruining the foliage. The common practice is to use kerosene emulsion or some form of tobacco extract.

Kerosene emulsion consists of oil emulsified with soap and may be prepared as follows: Hard soap half pound, water one gallon and kerosene two gallons. The soap should first be thoroughly dissolved in boiling water and then the kerosene added. The mixture should then be thoroughly agitated until it is creamy white in color. It may then be diluted at the rate of one part of emulsion to ten or twelve parts of water, and applied.

The tobacco sprays are more commonly used than any other and are generally more effective. They may be safely used against all kinds of aphids and on all plants. Tobacco sprays may be purchased already prepared or they may be made at home. For all ordinary purposes the commercial product is to be preferred because it saves the time and labor of preparation and because it is usually more uniform. The most widely used commercial form is known as "Black Leaf-40." The tobacco spraying may be used alone or it may be combined with the arsenate of lead lime-sulfur application that should be given for scab, codling moth and curculio about this time. When it is desirable to use the "Black Leaf-40" without lime-sulfur, the addition of soap will greatly aid the spray in spreading over the leaves. If combined with lime-sulfur, first dilute the lime-sulfur to the required strength and then add the "Black Leaf-40" at the rate of one part to 800 or 900 parts of the diluted solution.

The aphid takes advantage of the curled leaves, thereby protecting itself from any of its natural enemies. It is of little use to spray after the leaves are badly curled because it is almost impossible to reach the aphids in its leafy folds. If the leaves are just starting to curl, a spray applied with great force into the folds where the plant lice are working will be effective. For best results an angle nozzle is to be preferred to the ordinary straight nozzle because it will be easier to reach the under side of the leaves where the plant lice are at work.—J. H. Carmody, Department of Horticulture, Ky. Expt. Station.

In contact with each grain. Then spread out to dry before planting. It will be ready in about twelve hours. It has been proved in this division of the experiment station that no harm results to the corn from this treatment.

A further suggestion may be made: Maggots of this sort are most likely to attack enfeebled seeds, due either to unfavorable soil conditions or to the use of moldy seed corn. Some of the injured seed corn shows evident traces of a pink fungus (a Fusarium), which is frequently observed on ears of corn grown in the state. Such corn is likely to germinate feebly and to become the prey of insects. Care taken to avoid corn bearing the mold, and treatment before planting with tar, should greatly help in avoiding this maggot and also other pests which prey upon germinating corn.—H. Garman, Head of Division of Entomology and Botany, Kentucky Experiment Station.

KEEPS THE CHICKS HEALTHY.

A good outdoor run on clean, fresh grass will do more than anything else to keep the chicks healthy and it pays to move them to a fresh place as often as is necessary to keep their run clean.

DEVELOPING THE COLTS PAYS

Nothing on the farm pays more in cash returns than so treating the young colts that they will develop into the most valuable animals that their peculiar composition will allow.

The disk that does not turn adds heavily to the draft.

Do not neglect the manure even if the heavy spring work does require most of your attention. It should be protected if you do not have time to haul it out.

Give the calves a good start and then do not sell them carelessly to the first buyer who comes along.

Keep the cultivator busy in both the den and orchard. It pays.

Supplement pasture with alfalfa if the grass is short.

HENRY HAD COURAGE

By JANE PHAR.

"He said," Carle admitted defiantly, after being pressed to helplessness, "that I'd better have it out. Said it wasn't possible to save it."

"That's too bad," sympathized Mrs. Carle. "I'd have it done right away—today."

"Yes," said Carle, casually. "No use putting it off."

When he returned home that evening Mrs. Carle met him tenderly. "Did it hurt you much?" she inquired.

"Huh?" asked Carle, blankly. "Why, your tooth—you had it extracted, didn't you?"

"Oh," murmured Carle, as though recalled from a long distance. "No—I didn't. I have been too busy, Emily, to think of myself. I didn't have any time. I'll go tomorrow."

"Well?" inquired Mrs. Carle, the following evening. "How do you feel, Henry? Was it painful?"

Carle paused in the act of removing his overcoat and gazed at her reproachfully. "I wish, Emily," he said, "that you would recollect that I am a business man and not free to follow my own whims and inclinations. You may be able to consult your own pleasure, but you needn't think I can drop a $20,000 deal for the sake of a mere tooth!"

"But the dentist said for you to have it out!" persisted his wife inexorably. "It wouldn't take half an hour! You're just trying to put it off, Henry Carle, and I must say that I am surprised at you!"

"No such thing!" cried Mr. Carle, with immense indignation. "A baby wouldn't mind having a tooth out nowadays with their modern methods! If you think I am afraid of a trifling unpleasantness—pooh! I'm as hungry as a bear!"

"Henry," said Mrs. Carle, the following morning as he left for the city. She spoke very distinctly. "Remember, you are to go today and have that tooth out!"

"They Were Telling Him to Wake Up."

"Yes, yes!" agreed Carle, with some irritation. "Why do you nag so? I'll drop in on my way to the office and attend to it. I think it's foolish, for it seems like a perfectly good, sound tooth to me—I—"

"Henry!" cried Mrs. Carle witheringly.

That afternoon Carle phoned he had to stay down town to dinner with a client and that Mrs. Carle was not to sit up for him. She had got as far as asking, "Did you have?" when the receiver at his end hung up with a click.

At the breakfast table the next morning he got in ahead of her. "No, don't start telling me about that tooth!" he said, with infinite and weighty sarcasm. "I am quite aware, my dear, that I possess a molar which has to be extracted, according to the dentist, in whom, by the way, I haven't any too much faith! I intend, however, to abide by his decision—I can't afford not to when a man is such a pirate in his charges as Jenkins—and I have it done today if my business permits. Further than that, I wish nothing said about the affair!"

"You are a coward," stated Mrs. Carle, distinctly and unpleasantly. "I never thought my husband would be a—"

The front door banged heavily after Carle. Twice that morning Mrs. Carle got him on the telephone to make inquiries. The second time he was so violent that she did not wait for him to finish, but hung up the receiver. She gathered that he was engaged in settling the fate of LaSalle street, Wall street and possibly Europe, and if she thought—

Immediately before noon Carle's office door opened abruptly and looking up he beheld on the threshold his wife. Carle was alone, feet on his desk, cigar in mouth, magazine in hand, an aura of immense leisure surrounding him. He turned pale.

"Henry," said Mrs. Carle, "at great inconvenience to myself, I have come down here to accompany you to the tooth extracting bee. If you can leave Wall street and your numerous clients for a short time, I should like you to come with me—at once!"

Carle got on his feet hurriedly and before he knew it was in the fatal chair.

They were telling him to wake up before he was sure that anything was happening to him. Everybody was quite cheerful and casual and acted as though nothing had occurred. In the outer office he met his wife, a little anxious and pale.

"Well?" she asked. Carle smiled at her in a superior way and shrugged into his overcoat. "Why, Emily," he said, "you really act as though you were nervous!"—Chicago Daily News.

HOW WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cleveland, Ohio—"My left side pained me so for several years that I expected to have to undergo an operation, but the first bottle I took of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound relieved me of the pains in my side and I continued its use until I became regular and free from pains. I had asked several doctors if there was anything I could take to help me and they said there was nothing that they knew of. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."

MADE A PERSONAL APPEAL

Tailor's Desperate Endeavor to Make Convention Listen to "His Best Customer."

Registrar O'Loughlin of Brooklyn will think twice before he undertakes to address another convention of tailors. His own tailor led him into it. O'Loughlin put on his openwork clothes and sat on the platform. Tailors, cutters, buyers, city salesmen, busheims, models, bosses, other items of the tailoring industry buzzed loudly on the floor. Now and then some man would enter and be greeted with applause.

"That," said O'Loughlin's tailor and guide, "is Max Schleimer, he is the buyer for Clipperton & Menx."

Hours O'Loughlin sat there. At last he was introduced as the next speaker. No one paid the least attention to him. Conversation rose toward the heights of emotion. After three false starts O'Loughlin sat down. He was angry enough for arson. His tailor saw the black rage on his brow.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he belated, whacking at the table with his gavel. "You should listen to Mr. O'Loughlin. He is my best customer.—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

Business Is on Its Way Out Again. Speaking of the business outlook the Manufacturers' Record says that a group of New York men had gathered in a rather mournful spirit, and as they discussed the business outlook, which seemed to them to grow darker and darker, one wit in the party, turning to a staid, much perturbed financier, said:

"Mr. Blank, can you tell me how far a dog can run into the woods?"

Mr. Blank, somewhat irritated at such a trivial remark at a time of serious discussion, rather tartly replied that "he supposed a dog could run into the woods just as far as he wanted to."

"No," said the questioner, "when he has run half-way into the woods he is then running out of the woods."

ARY.

The Youth's Instructor gives the following origin of the word salary: Many years ago salt was so valued to obtain, but so much desired, that Roman soldiers were paid part of their wages in salt. Now, the Latin word for salt is sal, and from that came the word salarium, meaning salt money. Finally the soldiers were paid in money but the term salarium was still used to designate these wages. From this old Latin word comes our English word "sal-

44,000,000 RED CROSS SEALS SOLD

New York State Leading With 10,000,000—10 Per Cent Gain Over 1912.

More than 44,000,000 Red Cross Christmas Seals were sold last December, according to a report issued by the National Association for Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, and the American Red Cross. In this way $440,000 is netted for anti-tuberculosis work in various parts of the United States.

The sale is a gain of 4,000,000 seals over 1912, or 10 per cent. It is hoped that this year the 50,000,000 mark will be reached. The seal design for 1914 has been selected and orders for the printing of 100,000,000 seals have been placed. Plans for the organization of a larger sale this year than ever before have been perfected.

New York State lead the country last year with a sale of over 10,500,000 seals or one for each man, woman and child in the State. Of this number more than 6,825,000 were sold outside of New York City by the State Charities Aid Association. Pennsylvania's sale of 2,800,000, Wisconsin fourth 3,125,000 seals. Ohio came next with 2,500,000, Hawaii sold the most seals sale of 2,800,000, Wisconsin fourth with 2,700,000 and Illinois fifth with per capita, the total sale being somewhat over two for each inhabitant. Rhode Island came second with a sale of two per person.

Beginning with a sale of 13,500,000 in 1908, in six seasons the revenue which these little holiday seals have brought to the anti-tuberculosis campaign has more than tripled, an aggregate for the period of over $1,800,000, or 180,000,000 seals.

NEW HARMONY

And Its Centennial—Founded by Rappists Who Left Wonderful Impress On Beautiful Country.

(By Dr. A. G. Browning.)

To the close student of history alone, or one having opportunity of personal observation, can the phenomenal centennial just closed at New Harmony, Indiana, have real significance or be suggestive of facts having historical interest and values, though vouchered and conducted by the best in brain and position, our country over.

Ex-President Taft, one of many distinguished orators upon the great occasion, set the authentic seal upon the wondrous historic statements when, as introductory he said: "No other town in all our land, with but one hundred years of history, can claim such close relations to so many movements of present sociological and political interest. It was the seat of two experiments in specialties of very different types. It enlisted in the latter a brilliant set of social and educational reforms. In their number were skilled students of nature who made New Harmony, for a time, an important center of scientific investigation and publication for the country. In New Harmony were established the first industrial schools, the first kindergartens in the United States, and from there came leaders in the movement for common school education, for emancipation of women, and the abolition of slavery. Their activity, influence and ability in the struggle that followed, entitled New Harmony to first place in the story of achievement in these great reforms."

I claim it among the best of my fortunes to know the ancient town, to be familiar with its amazing history, acquired by near two years residence, the benefits of association and the opportunities for local study. My sister was the wife of Dr. Francis Asbury Mott, well remembered there, with whom I passed my first year as medical student. I write of New Harmony as I knew it over half a century ago—as I there learned to know of it, since laying of the cornerstone!

I can only briefly summarize; many pages could give only outlines, and feebly; a volume could alone detail the facts, marvelous to the verge of romance.

George Rapp, of Germany, was the original founder of Harmonie, coming to be New Harmony with the passing of events. It is history that he was a man of force, character, strong convictions, little education, some meane. A God-fearing man, he was yet a dissenter from the prevailing religion of his time and place, he, and numerous followers, not accepting the married estate—practicing celibacy, and his governing idea being to establish a community with this the vital principle. This developed opposition, ultimate persecution, leading to emigration to free America, there to enlarge upon his cherished propaganda. He founded his community upon this basis, in Pennsylvania in 1803. After about ten years of this, having accumulated money, they purchased 20,000 acres of land in southern Indiana to which New Harmony is now central. Thus began the ancient town, upon these principles based and controlled wholly by the Rappists.

God and nature were generous beyond compare to the chosen site. To hand for the sturdy adventures were the beautiful river and its undulating banks; the enchanting island and its bewitching foliage; the endless acres of virgin soil, seemingly in hunger for the awakening touch; the bewildering forests swaying in graceful welcome—"twas a dream! And 'tis in evidence today that the nifty Rappists were not idle. As if by magic, within ten short years came handsome streets; brick, stone and frame buildings—dwellings, factories, shops, church; the material for all home-made; the stone quarried from the hills; lumber and logs from the forests; lime from crushed mussel shells; miles of fencing, endless hinges; latches, doors, gates, with never a nail—only wooden pegs. Their canoes were dug out of logs. All this was told me, time and again, till "familiar as a household word." And with all this primitive condition, are, or the semblance of it was not lost or forgotten, as modesty evidenced in the gabled roofs, vine-clad hills, beautiful orchards, and stately church, in shape of cross, supported by handsome pillars of natural wood, the doorway decorated by a golden rose, and a fitting inscription carved upon a column of stone.

The most wonderful to me of all, was the Labyrinth, still intact, as I explored it. 'Tis a famous horticultural design, constructed of flowing shrubs and vines enclosing a Hermitage—a summer house, with rough exterior, but within ornamental and beautifully furnished. The walks about were a perfect maze.

With the following I was in frequent touch, and—"twas touching! At one side of town, enclosed by a brick wall, about six feet high, capped with granite, was the Pappists' cemetery, embracing four or five acres, in which slept hundreds of their dead. It would never present to any one as a burial place, as there were no mounds, stones or monuments to mark a grave of any one—naught but shrubs and flowers about the last resting place. The same equality was preserved in death that characterized their phenomenal lives. When the town was sold, this acreage was reserved, as sacred to the dead. And the locusts were replaced with ever-living cedar and pine, that the Rappists' may live ever, in the coming memories. Yes, it was touching!

JUNE.

A wide-spreading tree,
A shady nook,
A cliff, a fern,
A sparkling brook;
A woodland path,
A mossy dell,
A daisy white,
Or a sweet blue-bell;
A banner of white
O'er the sky unfurled—
And I quite forget
This workaday world;
A bird's cheery song,
Its joyous trill,
Beckons and holds me,
With its potent thrill;
And the tasks undone,
Which are mine to do,
Must wait—and wait—
Till the song is thro';
The soft breezes sigh—
All Nature's in tune—
And my heart re-echoes,
Ay, yes! 'tis June.

GRANDPA SHUMAKER VERY MUCH SURPRISED.

A birthday party was given Wednesday to one of the oldest citizens of the county by his children and grand children. Mr. Louis Shumaker of Johnson being the recipient, and the occasion was his 70th birthday.

The event came as a complete surprise to Mr. Shumaker who was at work in a nearby tobacco field when his children began to arrive early in the morning. Mr. Shumaker was gradually let in on the surprise but it was not until a surpassing dinner of the famous old Kentucky style was served by Miss Mary Shumaker, his daughter, did he realize what was being done. The day passed in the true family reunion style and will long be remembered by Mr. Shumaker and his many children and relatives present. Those present besides the immediate home family which is composed of Miss Mary, Louis and Joe Shumaker, were:

Mrs. Charles Shuma and husband and four children of the county; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gallenstein and son Edward of this city; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Burk and four children of Georgetown, Ky.; and Misses Lena, Margaret and Elizabeth Pepper of Johnson. Mrs. Gallenstein, Mrs. Shuma and Mrs. Burk are daughters of Mr. Shumaker. Rev. John Adlesburge of Carlisle was also present.

NEWSY NOTES FROM THE DOVER NEWS.

What so rare as a rain in June? Mrs. Ann Beckett, wife of Nace Beckett, colored, died Friday night after a lingering illness of more than a year.

Mrs. Carolae Chevis, wife of Sam Chevis, colored, died Thursday night at her home on Hall street, aged 63 years. Dr. Edward Sample who at one time ran a drug store in Dover, died at his home in Huntington, W. Va., a week ago Saturday, and was buried at Vanceburg the following Tuesday. He is survived by his wife and two children.

The chances for a bumper crop of tobacco in this county and Bracken have gone glimmering. By the time the wire worms and the drouth get through with what has been set the acreage will be reduced to half crop and the quality of what is left will depend on the future rains.

Messrs. Ray H. Bainum, Ralph Creekbaum and Frank Mitchell left Saturday for a week's fishing on the Licking River. Monday morning they telephoned for Fred Brown to come after them quick as scat. We do not know what caused the sudden desire to cut short their week's sport, unless it happened that the drouth had dried up the stream and the fish had gone to the river for a drink.

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Pickett and two daughters, Catherine and Elizabeth, of Maywood, near Chicago, Ill., arrived Saturday for a short visit to Mrs. Pickett's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. Scott Osborne. They motored through in Mr. Pickett's machine. Mr. and Mrs. Pickett left for their home Wednesday while the Misses Pickett remained for a more extended visit with their grandparents.

MORROW FOR ERNST

Eloquent Kentuckian Declares All Republicans Should Rally to the Covington Statesman.

An announcement of significance in political circles in Kentucky was made by Edwin P. Morrow, United States district attorney at Covington and one of the most eloquent orators in the Blue Grass State. Mr. Morrow says that he will enthusiastically support the candidacy of Hon. Richard P. Ernst for the Republican nomination for United States Senator from Kentucky. Attorney Morrow, who is very popular throughout the State said: "Although his opponent is a man of distinguished ability and would, if elected, reflect credit upon his State, yet I am for Hon. Richard P. Ernst of Covington for United States Senator. In my opinion Mr. Ernst is the most available and strongest candidate the Republicans of Kentucky could nominate. He can unite all the elements in the party and will be particularly successful in bringing back into line Progressives throughout the State. He has always been loyal to his party, and has devoted his time and energy toward building it up and bringing success to the Republicans in Kentucky. If nominated and elected, I am satisfied that he will treat with fairness and impartiality all Republicans in the State, no matter what may have heretofore been their political alignment. He will unquestionably make an active, vigorous and energetic campaign and will effect an organization which will bring out the entire voting strength of the Republican party. His record, both public and private, is beyond reproach. From my information and observation there is a general demand for his nomination throughout Kentucky—a spontaneous expression of confidence in his ability and his availability as a candidate. If nominated, he will be elected in November, and will represent Kentucky in the Senate with credit to himself and honor to the State."

NOTES FROM THE RIPLEY BEE.

Mr. A. H. Shinkle of Louisville, Ky., joined his wife here the first of the week and is a guest at the home of Mrs. Ella McCaughey.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Jaynes of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, are guests at the home of his father, Mr. C. O. Jaynes, in Front street.

Next Tuesday, June 30th, the citizens of Ripley will be asked to vote for a bond issue to provide money to erect a new public school building in Ripley.

Miss Mattie Aliene Tweed, clerk at the Ripley National Bank is off for a vacation. She will first visit friends in Illinois, and from there will go to Hillsboro, North Dakota.

As a result of the small amount of rain in upper Ohio Valley for the past five weeks, navigation has been suspended between Gallipolis and Pittsburgh. Crops in this section are burning up as a result of the drouth, vegetables are scarce and grocers have to get supplies in the Cincinnati market.

Mr. Carl Miller of Lebanon, son of August Miller of Ripley, was married to Miss Lida Fluharty, daughter of James Fluharty of Mt. Washington, June 13th.

Miss Mary Bell Shotwell returned to Columbus, Ohio, last week, where she will take the Pasteur treatment. While there on a visit some two weeks ago, she played with a dog at the home of Mr. O. Heffernan, and which afterwards went mad and bit Mr. Heffernan. Miss Shotwell had a scratch on her hand and as a prevention against infection, she went back to receive the treatment.

The Library Trustees have received the plans for the new Public Library and will likely adopt them at a meeting to be held today.

Greatest Business Failure Recorded in History of the World

H. B. Claflin Dry Goods Co.
"Goes Democratic"—Owe $35,000,000

New York, June 25—The great dry goods house of H. B. Claflin company failed today with liabilities of $35,000,000. The assets are estimated at $40,000,000. Two proceedings, friendly and unfriendly, threw the firm into bankruptcy, and two receivers were named under bonds of $500,000 each.

The Claflin company controls or is affiliated with about thirty great retail stores throughout the United States, and it was the indorsement of their paper, held by more than 3,000 banks here and in interior cities, that caused the crash.

The United Dry Goods companies and the Associated Merchants company, though affiliated with the Claflin company, through stock control, were in no way involved in the failure. Their chain of stores, it was stated in the financial district, would remain intact.

Hope was expressed also that the Claflin retail enterprises would be saved. Unless blocked by creditors, a reorganization of the failed firm is contemplated, according to a statement issued by John Claflin, the president.

The Claflin Company.
The H. B. Claflin company, receivers for which have been appointed:

Has assets estimated at about $44,000,000.
Liabilities are estimated at $35,000,000.

Controls 28 dry goods arms through out the United States.
Between 2,500 and 3,000 banks hold paper of the stores.

Twenty five or thirty of the large discount banks of New York are creditors for large amounts.

Deafness Cannot be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; since cases of deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.
